Erin Hamilton is the founder and chief mycologist of The Mushroom Conservatory in Howell. Raised on a small farm, Hamilton developed a deep connection to the land and a passion for sustainable farming early on in life. This has guided her path to sharing the wonders of kingdom fungi with the world and what they can do for food, wellness and restoring the planet's ecosystem.

She has spent years cultivating mushrooms and exploring their uses in food, medicine and environmental restoration. Her hands-on approach is rooted in a genuine passion for combining traditional cultivation techniques with innovative research.

Through The Mushroom Conservatory, she shares the knowledge and tools needed to grow mushrooms and appreciate their benefits. Hamilton also collaborates with institutions like the University of Michigan, contributing to research about mushrooms.
